Learning from current federal, provincial and territorial research-informed initiatives.

Expert panelists/Co-conveners & bios:

Dr. Bill Morrison, Professor of Educational Psychology, University of New Brunswick & Co-Executive Director of the Health and Education Research Group

Dr. Morrison is a clinical psychologist with advanced graduate degrees in both educational foundations and psychology. In addition to his 25 years of clinical practice, Dr. Morrison has had extensive experience in the development and implementation of health and education services for children and adults in several Canadian provinces. He was instrumental in the design and implementation of New Brunswick's ISD framework, and has worked on senior policy initiatives related to integrated mental health services in NWT and BC. In 2018, Dr. Morrison was recognized as one of a 150 Leading Canadians for Mental Health by the Centre for Addictions and Mental Health (CAMH).

Dr. Denise Michelle Brend, Assistant Professor, Concordia University & Co-Researcher, Canadian Consortium on Child and Youth Trauma

Dr. Denise Michelle Brend is passionate about identifying and mitigating the ways in which exposure to potentially traumatic experiences can impact helping relationships as well as individuals and communities. Denise has over twenty years of experience as a psychotherapist, social worker, clinical supervisor, clinical trainer, and facilitator of learning. Denise's research is focussing on the potentially harmful impacts of residential child welfare work, workplace social support, and the implementation of effective social responses to trauma through social innovation.
